WILDLIFE RESCUE CENTER NEWS - We received a newsletter from the Rescue Center, which we donated to recently. They rescued and rehabilitated a number of wounded waterfowl. The birds are treated for shock and hypothermia first. Broken bones get splints and then the bird is x-rayed for shotgun pellets. The birds often contain many pellets in their bodies. As long as no organs are affected and there are no broken bones, and their wounds have healed, the birds are eventually placed outdoors in the waterfowl pen, where they can swim and regain their strength. After hunting season, they are released into the wild. That's great work for our feathered friends.
